

Sticky Sesame Apricot Chicken

This may not seem very interesting to most people, but something really epic happened to me today. I FINALLY found maternity jeans that I don't hate. AND... I got new shoes. 3 pairs! AND... a new bra. AND... a few other nice shirts to get me through the rest of my pregnancy. Life is good. I look like a normal human being again. It feels good!

If anyone ever tells you a new pair of jeans that fit right isn't life changing, please have them reference this. IT IS. This baby bump and Mama are so happy!

When I arrived home from my epic shopping adventure, food was necessary. Walking around the mall is exhausting when it feels like there is a bowling ball, that may or may not pop out at any time, between your legs. So I put together this Sticky Sesame Apricot Chicken and sat down!

What I really love about this Sticky Sesame Apricot Chicken recipe is it combines so many flavors. The apricot preserves I used are a bit tart. Mix that with the sweetness of brown sugar, and the saltiness of soy sauce...and you have the perfect combination! I've mentioned my Jasmine Rice cravings, and this recipe did not disappoint! It goes great over a giant heap of perfectly cooked Jasmine Rice, and some additional soy sauce on top. ☐

Recipe Tips

1. I mentioned this in my Honey Mustard Garlic Chicken recipe as well, but when coating chicken it really helps to get everything in place before you start so you don't have to continually wash your hands and then reach for the forgotten items. I've only done this a million times before I started telling myself over and over again to get everything in place before starting!
2. Use one hand to dip in the egg, and then the other to coat in cornstarch. If you try to use the same hand you will have a hot mess! After working in restaurants and coating about a million pieces of chicken, sometimes this still isn't second nature to me. The temptation to dip with the same hand is still there! haha
3. This is a base recipe. If you like more salty, add more soy sauce! If you like more sweet, add more brown sugar!

Sticky
SESAME APRICOT
CHICKEN

